

TASK 3: Evaluation Website Design

Marzia Di Massimo 4.2B

In this evaluation, I'm going to talk about my MCAST website re-design.

In all honesty, I am quite pleased with how it turned out.

Having already dealt with the same task of redesigning the MCAST website, and this time with a better foundation, I am happy that it already looks like a real website.

During the design and organisation of the website, I obviously encountered some unexpected issues, but fortunately I was able to fix most of them by simplifying the text codes where necessary, thanks to tutorials in general.

I showed my website to some of my classmates and together we agreed that, despite a few minor flaws here and there, it was a decent, well-structured website.

They pointed out what bothered them and what they liked about the site, and hearing them say that there weren't as many mistakes as I usually make was a great relief, which motivated me and made me feel proud of having done a good job, even if it wasn't excellent.

The only thing I regret about the website are the details I had already imagined in the wireframes I had previously drawn for it, before opting for a much simpler design, with only colours reminiscent of our school's original website, adding images here and there, obviously linked to each page I wanted to mark them on.

Even the structure of the site was not entirely as I had imagined from the wireframes I had drawn. I had to change the original plan a little, partly because if I had included too many details, it would have created more problems and taken up too much time and space for what the site was supposed to be.

I conclude this evaluation with great positivity and light-heartedness, believing that our school's website is well designed and serves as a good source of inspiration.
